At the foot of the Suicide Cliff is a natural cave that was the Last Command Post for the defending Japanese forces. Onward to the rugged eastern shoreline you will find Bird Island Lookout with a view of the Pacific Ocean that remains with every visitor long after departure. Ranging in size up to 3.60 meters in diameter, Yap's stone money is used as legal tender in traditional business transactions. The largest collection is at the Stone Money Bank near Colonia, the district center.

Southward are now-quiet invasion beaches of Asan and Piti, the scenes of heavy fighting in 1944. Old Fort Soledad, built in 1802 overlooking Umatac Village, watched for Spanish galleons and English pirates. A few miles down the hilly coast are Merizo and spectacular view of Cocos Island at Guam's southern tip. both are popular for picnics and water sports. Inarajan Village still retains its Spanish architecture.
