Pyongyang was the capital of Koguryo, the first feudal state of Korea, with a long history of over 1,500 years. Now, it is the capital of DPRK and the political, economic and cultural center of the country. Also, it has over 70 large parks and recreation grounds. Hence, Pyongyang is called "the city in a park".

Since the Fatherland Liberation War of the Korean people

(1950 – 1953) Pyongyang has taken on the look of a new city with the erection of great monumental edifices, monumental towers, museums, cultural and art establishments. Broad streets, grand buildings and parks covered with green foliage – all this gives Pyongyang the appearance of a modern city.
